THE MEDICAL SCHOOL AT THE UNIVERSITY.

THE MEDICAL SCHOOL AT THE UNIVERSITY.

Now that so much is being said about the building hospitals and their control, about the qualifications of the medical staff, and the necessity for the things needed in a hospital, it is not surprising that it is not unprofitable to give some account of the condition of our Medical School in connection with the University. It is a matter of no small importance at this very juncture, amongst the plans which have been urged in favour of the raising of a new hospital, that we have now a school in the colony where medical education may be obtained, and that, if the State supports

As inspection, then the State should therefore guard against the possibility of an indirectly besetworn. We there, detailed one of our staff for the duty, and what follows result of his inquiries.

The buildings in which the school is located are situated in the paddock behind the University, and they are of a simple design. The first two are for the students and are appropriated to the use of the students. The third is for the biology. They are enclosed by a fence of corrugated iron and are united by a covered way. The first cottage contains the chemistry, microscopical, and anatomical laboratories, and the professor's retiring-room. The cottage behind it contains the physics and the mathematics laboratories. The rooms are excellently lighted and ventilated, and seem adapted for their different purposes. There are still

A third cottage is just being completed for the departments of zoology, comparative anatomy, and botany. Accommodation is here provided for the engineering colleges there are the usual complement of lecture halls, laboratories, and lecture theatres.

The fourth cottage is not actually commenced yet, but will not be wanted for a year or so. It is destined for finishing courses of the medical curriculum.

The clinical studies and lectures may be taken in any of the four buildings. The first, second, and third are under the Prince Alfred. The last, being within the University Reserve, and being so intimately connected with the Un-

The teachers as yet appointed are: Anatomy, physiology, Dr. Anderson Stunt (professor and dean), A. B. Allen; chemistry, Dr. J. W. Johnson; physics, Professor Smith; chemistry, Professor Johnson; botany, zoology, and comparative anatomy, Prof. Stephens; demonstrator in these subjects and in histology, Mr. Haswell; medicine, Dr. Cox; surgery, Dr. Miller; surgery and pathology of women, Dr. Colburn; nasopharyngology, otitis media, otitis externa, Dr. C. C. Wilkinson; medical jurisprudence, Dr. W.

Goods. Lecturers on clinical surgery, clinical medicine, psychological medicine have not yet been appointed, but during the year, and before they are needed, the following have been appointed, and as a rule, distinct from, and quite independent of, the teachers have been selected from the most eminent practitioners in the city, and may thus command the confidence of the pupils; they are Dr. Sir Alfred Roberts, George Benbow, J. Horsfield, J. C. Macleod, J. C. Macleod, J. C. Macleod, P. M. R. Quake, and Arthur Hamwic. The examiners are also members of the faculty, and thus directly control the education of the students, as well as examine them at wards.

because a preliminary year in the arts classes is the path to the medical classes. This preliminary year, with examination at the end of it, takes the place of the second year of the arts and sciences in many other schools, and it measures merely the medical student's general, but fairly well educated, and thus able to take advantage of instruction given to the professional classes.

Class examinations are held at stated intervals, and students may absent him or herself from them. In fact, the teacher is so certain that the medical students in the classes are doing their work, and the results of these examinations are laid before the senate.

The degree examinations are three in number, held at the end of the second, fourth, and last years of study. In the first two the student is examined in the subjects of the chemistry, botany, sociology, and comparative anatomy; these being preliminary scientific studies. In the examination the medico-physiologic subjects are taken up, human anatomy, physiology, pathology, and materia medica. The practical subjects are medicine, surgery, midwifery, care of women and children, of the eyes, and of the mind, lastly, legal medicine. In all these subjects a vised or practical examination follows the written one, so that our medical students are not only well grounded in theory, but also in practice.

In the examination for M.D., a new feature is introduced, for either an old one is revived, in many schools the M.B. degree is of very little more value than the M.D., because it may mean merely the payment of a further fee, or

It seems that a large number of inquiries have been made as to the possibility of obtaining the degree on a non-thesis basis. The answer is that the American University means, however, have wisely set up a good standard for admission to begin as they want to end, and thus many of the requests have been refused.

The new M.A. in history commences on March 26, 1930.

The pathological museum contains a goodly number of specimens, and the medical library has now a larger number of the more commonly used works. Diagrams arranged on the premises, and much apparatus is intended to be put on for the study of the ears, and it is expected that the latter will come to hand before it is required. Dr. Williamson is now in Vienna, and is selecting material for the pathological department.

Fears have been expressed that Sydney would be too hot for the study of dissection. It is, however, a very pleasant uniform climate, and the dissection is not opposed to this. Dissection, he believes, could be carried on all the year round, if need be.

The entire course is to be made as practical as possible.

For the encouragement of the working student, assistance is given to students who are in need of assistance, several prizes are awarded. The most recent which contain descriptions of the prizes are as follows: The first prize is a gold medal, worth $100.00, for the student who has completed the course in the shortest time. Of those the Rowlett gold medal, however, already been awarded for excellence in anatomy, exhibition of the value of about $50 a year, lately given by Mr. John S. Smith, and that of a similar value, founded by Mr. J. H. Rowlett, for the student who has completed the course in the Medical School. In addition to these, Lovey and Alexander endowments, also of the value of about $50 a year, and which are given to a Bachelor of Science.

THE DEFENSES OF SYDNEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

SIR.—If I take exception to what we may assume is a self-confessed statement under the above heading in your issue of Saturday last, it is not done in a casting aspersions character but with a view to elicit further, and doubtless satisfactory, explanation of what on the surface appears either as inaccurate or misleading statements. The actual question opens with the self-congratulatory phrase "The shortly by a catalogue of the strength of our present force, and then by the probable division of those forces in the event of war. Taking these two points as being capable of further explanation, with regard to one another—1st. The present strength of the force, which is 100,000 men (one may suppose) 100 men in each, as the total strength of 306. 2. The volunteer artillery is represented by a force of 279 men, divided between Sydney, Newcastle, and Wollongong.

The contemplated divisions are given as follows:—Of the 200 men artillery—120 batteries of the permanent force, 80 men and six batteries of volunteer artillery, and reserve battery at Bulli. Field force—One battery permanent force and six battalions of volunteer artillery.

Three hundred feet from the permanent fence, and approximately 300 m. north, there are to be supplied from the volunteer fire department, which, as above stated, consists of 27 men, and these in three divisions. Now, Sir, after this I have to inform the honorable members on the subject of the "divided batteries" that the Government intend to have 100 men in each of the batteries, five of these batteries exist only on paper; the destination is unsettled.

Again, it is stated that the forts at Madras and St. George's are to be provided with 100 men and 200 guns. Such a provision is not only a waste of money, but it is also a "ditch" in the middle for the passage of the sea and the land cover, and can in no way act as a protection to navy and army units at sea or on a distance from each other; nay, it is head would these claims ever be taken in the courts by an enemy. It would also be satisfactory to know whether arguments exist under present regulations for a strenuous escape, and therefore absence from business of the volunteer forces—for such is, of course, a necessary result of our being involved in a present war with South Africa. Perhaps the difference of level in ground round the useless and obsolete battery of 80-pounders may afford an excuse for the statement that one does not expect an expansion would enable me, for once, to sleep peacefully, and I am sure that the Government will not have a habitué's mouth—possibly my pen, for present generation allowed. In the hope of being satisfied, I repeat.

law, he thought it was expedient to arrive at some in the way proposed under the bill. The bill had contained the omission of various amendments, hence the proclamations by the king to the electors, that they were to perform public duties, and no wrong could be done to any one by the passing of the bill. The electors could not feel aggrieved, and the electors could in any way damaged, as they knew that the king, who held offices of profit under the Crown, had held offices of profit under the Crown. The committee was not in accordance with the spirit of the 29th section of the Constitution Act, which was to the effect that elections should not be declared void as to any one of the electors. He believed it was important for the House to interest the committee. The bill would no doubt amend the Constitution Act, and he contended it would only bring such an amendment as it was in the power of Parliament to do. dangerous thing to do, as it would create a precedent. It would be better to abide by the decision of the Elections Committee, despite the inconvenience it might cause to do so. If that difficulty had been created, he should have had pleasure in voting against the bill. The case of Lord Dartington was not in point, as he had never been out of the House. Mr. W. J. FERROUSON and Mr. GARRARD supported the second reading, but at the same time stated their intention to vote against the 4th clause.

Mr. STEWART, in replying, disclaimed any intention of censuring the Elections and Qualifications Committee.

Mr. [REDACTED] He, however, thought the committee should have proceeded under the 62nd section of the Copyright Act, which was an alternative course. The garnering of the Australian wheat harvest is this year a much more satisfactory work than it was last year or in 1923. In Australia, the weather was very propitious, but the average yield of the wheat colony, had not averaged more than five bushels per acre for three years. This year she will have from ten to twelve bushels per acre; and instead of a surplus of 100,000 tons, she will have 400,000 to 600,000 tons to export. Victoria has also a magnificent crop, and a surplus of 50,000 tons last year is likely to be succeeded by one of 350,000 tons this. New Zealand will probably have a large harvest, perhaps not larger than last, but with fair weather the grain will be much plumper. New South Wales does not count for much as a wheat-producing colony, but it is believed she will have as much as last year, when she had the largest production of wheat yet reaped. Beyond its own wants, Australasia will this year probably

The proposed Eastern Tramway deviation and curtailment system has not been kindly received by the people whom it is supposed to benefit. One of the objects named as suggesting this new departure, the idea of a deviation, was that it would be a very desirable thing if it can be done ; and the relief afforded by the scheme now projected might turn out to be almost inappreciable. To withdraw two or three hundred trams out of a thousand would still leave the crossing dangerous if it be dangerous now. It is a common thing that the most crowded parts of great cities, having their traffic all regulated, are less dangerous than some other less crowded places. The vehicular and pedestrian traffic over London Bridge is enormous, and whilst it is very slow, it may be said to be remarkably safe. The difficulty and the danger induce official precautions and personal care, with the best results. If there be no other reason for diverting the eastern traffic, it will not commend itself to one danger should be provided for in the case that will perhaps create another. The most serious aspect of the new proposal is that it will create danger. All persons put down from eastern trams on the eastern side of the present lines will have to cross them to reach the city, or to take trams running to the quay. And what is to be specially noticed is, that they will have to cross at or near the now-overcrowded King-street crossing. It is to be noted that the roads are crowded now! Instead of the passengers by 230 or 200 trams being carried across the street or put down on the right side for the city, they will have to scramble as best they can from a position comparatively

Whatever may have been the fate of HENRY SALWAY, whose mysterious disappearance for the last three or four weeks has occasioned very much concern on the part, not only of his friends, but of the community generally, it is to be hoped, that the Government, operating through the police, will not leave anything undone that would tend to solve the matter. The interest attaching to the case is all the more intense from the fact that it was in the same neighbourhood, rather more than three years ago, that LAMONT YOUNG and four other persons who were with him and suddenly mysteriously disappeared. Notwithstanding long-continued searches by experts in the business, no trace of the missing men has been obtained to date, and that was found immediately after their disappearance. It was conjectured that they were either drowned or murdered. But, after the lapse of three years, not a scintilla of evidence has been obtained to support either theory. If they met with foul-play, the "miraculous organ" has, for once, failed to speak. If they were drowned, the sea, for once, has been forced to give up the dead, or any other trace of her victims. In regard to the last unfortunate the police have no better confession to make than that they are unable to obtain any trace of the man. It would be unreasonable to blame them for this. They can only do their best, and they seem so far to have been doing it. They report that there is no suspicion of foul-play. In that case it ought not to be difficult to ascertain some main cause for the disappearance. Yet the SALWAY for many miles around the spot where SALWAY was last seen alive—close to his home, and apparently going to work on his farm—has been scoured by parties of horsemen and aboriginals on foot in a most systematic manner. Creeks have been dragged and ranges explored, but no tidings of him are obtainable. The search parties have been out, not only in direct tracks, but in the day, the night, the SALWAY destroyed his own life is scarcely tenable, or surely some trace of his remains would have been discovered. On the other hand, the theory of foul-play has little to sustain it. The loss, in short, is scarcely less mysterious than that of Messrs. YOUNG and party, and as both occurred in the one neighbourhood, the public will naturally look to this mysterious disappearance as the starting event. Possibly, in the elucidation of this last mystery some clue may be obtained by which the first may be explained.

A MEETING of a number of influential residents of the eastern suburbs was held yesterday afternoon, at the offices of Mr. C. J. Royce, Bond-street, with a view to the formation of a committee to continue the agitation against the proposed alteration in the eastern tramway system. Mr. Royce occupied the chair, and on the motion of Mr. J. C. Neild, seconded by Mr. J. R. Thompson, it was resolved that those present form themselves into a committee, with power to add to their number, to take action against the proposed alteration, and Mr. Neild was appointed honorary secretary, and was requested to prepare a circular letter, addressed to the members for Paddington, and East and South Epsom, and to the

"With you kindly allow me," writes an employee, "to suggest that, as the 20th January will fall on Saturday this year, the holiday be postponed to take place on the Monday following. Saturday is bad for trade when they are expected to close their shops, and it is therefore the employees will be compelled to resume business at 5 p.m. This will be a bad way of celebrating the anniversary of this prosperous colony. Let the Saturday and its night be as any other, and give us the holiday on Monday. Employees can have a holiday when they like. We cannot."

For the week ending 16th January, 1984, 29 out of 44 rabbits inspected have reported. They have made 87 inspections, travelled over 1,177 miles, and have found 134,790 screws infested. They report that the two runs the rabbits are increasing, on 16 stationary and on 27 decreasing. The number of men employed rabbiting is 112, the number required 180. The number of rabbits reported as killed is 717. The number of rabbits reported as bled is 117.

A LONDON paper observes:—"No importance be attached to the story that the rapprochement of the three European powers, the common action against Republicanism in Europe, the peace Bund is not aggressive, but defensive. It is directed against abstract principles, but against practical agents of the general peace. The fact that in the opinion of the Sovereigns and statesmen who projected the Alliance the one permanent danger to the European peace is to be found in France, which at present is under a Republican form of Government, may give an apparent anti-Republican tendency to the Monarchical league."
